Tact. Patience and Industry of the Wife Wiji Keep Married Love From Waning.

"Every married woman, nuless she has been so unfortunate as to marry a brute, holds her happiness under God in her own hands, and the keepers of it are love and patience," says Mrs. Moses P. Handay in "A Talk with Young Wives' in Woman's Home Companion, "Never reason with an angry man,' said the Eastern sage. It is the one perfect atreagthening isxative, cleansing the system effectually, dispelling coids, headnehes and fevers gently yet promptly and enabling one to overcome habitual censtipation permanently. Its perfect freedom from every objectionable quality and substance, and its acting on the kidneys, ilver and bowels, without weakening or irritating them, make it the ideal invative. It does no good under any circumstances, and when the man is your husband it is worse than folly. What, will it profit you, even though you have the best of the argument? Therefore, in everything, unless it be a matter of conscience, it is generally better to yield than to contend. Not that the wile is to be alavishly submissiva: no man can respect a woman who is lacking ln aelf-respect, and every married woman has her rights. But the best way in which to secure these rights is not by doing aggress sive battle for them. Let them be taken as a matter of course, taking it for granted that your husband's first wish is always for your comfort, as yours always is for his. Our Affairs are Never of as Much interest in Others' Eyes as in Our Own.

"Many of ne try to look ressonably at what seems perfectly natural; that others are never interested in our own affairs as we are ourselves." writes Edward Bok, on "Our Affairs in Othera' Eves." in the May Ladies' Home Ionrnal. ". 'How can they be?' we ask. 'We don't expect It.' And then to even these people little incident happens, and they wondar-just a little, perhaps, but stlli they wonder-at the lack of interest of others. These experiencs come to all: to some more than to others. It is a hard, cold truth, one that simost smacks of gree. But it is only a question of degree, at the best. Wa apeak of some one we know, and say he or sha is 'so only one of comparison. One need not be a pessimist to believe this. the fact is one of the most valuable lessons we can draw from lifs. We can extract the lesson of care and conaideration from it. For it is the kindest consideration possible to extend to even our best friend, to recognize his right to a limitation of interest in our affaira. Politely interested, even slucerely interested, our friends may be, as friandship warrants, but never to that same degree as we are interested. He and what better post-graduate courses proposes that the official exhibition of the mint shail contain a complete collection of all the coins current in the world in 1900. It appears that though collections of old coins and of coins of certain states have been shown at previons exhibitions, no complete collection has ever been shown. Commandant Mowat coatends that it would not serves notice on the public that he be s very difficult task to carry out his project. Those states which are officially participating in the exhibition would certainly, if requested by the director of the mint, send a complete collection of the coins current in their country, and also in the colonies depending on them. The French consuls, and even private persons, might be asked to procure the desired sets of coins from those states which are not officially represented. The coins would, of course, be grouped under their various nationalities, and Commandant Mowat thinks that they should be exhihited in such a way that both faces would be exposed to the public view unless two coins of each value could be obtained. In that case they could be exhibited side hy side. "A Panorama of the Modern Monetary World" is the title Commandant Mowat would give to his exhibition, which, he says, would afford considerable food for reflection to economista who dream of a unification of all monetary systems .-London Standard.

Suddenly a cool voice they had heard before rang ont an order, "Come on, boys-charge!" and the thin line rushed through the amoke and advanced up the hill. With a cheer they answered the fiery blast that swept into their faces with sudden tury. The air seemed instinct with leaden life, and volley after volley pealed forth from the deadly riflea. For one awinl moment the men faitered! Groans of agony and hoarse commands mingled, and all around American soldiers lay down to die. But the check was only momentary, and on into the jaws of death the column went. Every man leaned for ward as though breathing a heavy wind. From right, left and front they felt the pounding of theenemy'sguna, and shrapnel swept through the ranks

Burial of the Dead at Sea.

A Solemn Ceremony in the Tropical Night.

Emaciated by trial and sickness the dead man made light burden for two soldiers. Shrouded in canvas, he was carried to the rail at night-always at night. Burial by day would have been too painful to those who were left and who swarmed the ship that the cere- yes And then the dark cloud again settled mony could not have been performed in secret.

There were no black clothed mourn ers. None of the panoply of funerala was there. The nurses who ailently bore the body to the rail were dressed in their dark brown work uniformslike farmbands' overalls. Coffin himselt was flaunel shirted and wore a castoff cartridge belt around his waist. Off at one side lay Cuba, where piercing bullets and poison fever strove for ghastly honors. At the other, the complete darkness of the tropics shrouded the Caribbean as closely as the canvas cover shronded the dead man lying on deck. Above, the sky was velvet of the blackest, against which the stars stood out like spanglea. Below, the slow greasy awell of the mid-summer Caribbean alld and dropped and raised us, sick-

A bit of old furnace grating was tied to the dead man's feet. He was raised on a grating which rested on

" 'I am the resurrection and the "Good-hy, Bill," he had said to his life, saith the lord;" Coffin read the lines as the brightness of the electric light went back and forth, back and forth, on the sliding of the swell, and on through the prayer nntil "We therefore commit this body to the deep, looking for the general resurrection on the last day and the life oi the world to come, through our Lord Jesus Christ," reverently spoken, was the signal for the tilting of the grating. Then a soldier of our country glided down, down, down into the wet blackness of the sea; and np, np, np, into the immortal gratitude of the greatest nation .- Edward Marshail in
